HOLY ROSARY

Notes & Quotes

This past Sunday's readings revolved around these three callings: "Here I am. Send me." Jesus calling the apostles "Do not be afraid; from now on you will be catchers of men."

Each of these are a part of God calling us to do His will. We have to be open to hearing God's call and offering ourselves to His mission. When people question who will be the one to answer God's call, we can simply respond, "Here I am. Send me." While we do not always immediately know what God is calling us to do, the first step is to answer and say, "I am here to do your will, send me." God will let you know how to proceed so that you accomplish His will.

God calls us continually in our lives. It's not one calling and you are done. God will continue to direct us and ask us to serve Him throughout our lives. We must continue to listen for His call and be open to doing His will each time. To hear these calls, we must be listening for them. We "hear" God through prayer, by attending mass regularly, and through others. Listen and be ready to hear God's call to you. Work to add prayer, attending mass, and listening to others into your daily/weekly routine.

Another part of being called by God, is to serve as an example to the world. Through our callings, we become "catchers of men" because they see our actions, which then have an impact on them. By seeing our example, it can give them the ability to answer God's call for them and help them understand how to do their part in fulfilling God's will.

We are all called to be a disciple of Christ in our world. If we all share Christ, what a difference it can make in our world, and more importantly, what a difference it can make in our own children's lives. By seeing us listen to God and follow His will, they will learn what it is for them to be a disciple of Jesus.

Here I am. Send me!

Have a great week,

Jann Mulli
